COVER

Joyce R. Wilson of Time and Life in New York gives us the cat in a mid-winter, big city setting.

WHY THEY HATE CATS

It was in ancient Egypt that the Cat made her introduction to humans and to history, and what an introduction it must have been, for when we first meet her, "Mau", which was her name then, even as it is her call today, was the pampered earthly representative of Pasht, the Egyptian Goddess of Love and the Moon.

Cities were sacred to her, priests spent whole lives serving only her whims, and in death she shared the sarcophagi of the Pharaohs or had equally splendid ones made in the size of her own small body.

Yet in these days of her glory there is indication that even in Egypt in her sacred city of Bubastis she was not appreciated by all. It is here, the ancient records seem to show, that the division between those who love and worship her and those who fear and hate her began. Otherwise there would have been little reason for the law protecting the lives of cats — the law favoring the cat worshippers, who surely must have been in the tremendous majority, which in Bubastis punished by death the offense of killing a cat.

So it has always been — wherever the cat has gone there have been those she inspires to love and worship, and others (a smaller group in our own day, fortunately), who in their virulent hatred find excuses to kick her, torture her, and poison her or who if their sensibilities are too refined for such self-indulgence, take the vicarious methods of anti-cat movements and anti-cat legislation, or are content simply to talk or write about their feelings against cats and to expound their rationalizations of these feelings in the press, in the magazines, and to all who will listen.

Why do they do it. Why were cats

Cats Question Box

Conducted By E. A. Renaux, D.V.M.

Perhaps I'm being premature in my concern, but I heard or read recently that producers of some dog foods are going to add to their products an ingredient that will control fleas. I have been feeding my cats dog food and wonder if this might have ill effects on a cat.

—Emily Kern

903 N. 5th St., Springfield, Ill.

The work that is being done in this field is so far experimental and I know of no commercial product that is so treated. It will be some time before there is any definite and conclusive data.

Can you recommend any tape-worm medicine for cats and kittens which will not be regurgitated on giving.

—Mrs. Pauline Wilcox

2817 Hazel St., Augusta, Ga.

Some animals will regurgitate almost any type of medication. I usually use "Nemural"® because it can be given with some food, and this will help to control any tendency for vomiting. It is a medication that must be handled with care because it can cause some severe intestinal cramping if not used properly. Your Veterinarian should be able to advise you on its use or that of some similar preparation that he would prefer for the cat.

My Blue Point Siamese gave birth to a lovely litter of four kits all of them breech births. She seemed to have a minimum of difficulty delivering them although there was a fifth kitten that did not survive. Is a delivery of this sort dangerous for the cat? Will she always be apt to deliver her litter in this manner? Would breeding her again be risky?

—Mrs. Paul Mosher

5504 S. E. 43rd Ave., Portland 6, Oregon

Kittens may be born either head and shoulders first or hind quarters first. It does not apparently seem to cause any difficulty. Subsequent breeding would not be any more risky than the last breeding.

Would a diet cause a cat to scratch excessively? He eats the dirt in the potted plants every chance he gets and we wonder if there is something lacking in a diet of egg yolks, milk, rotated with cat food.

—Mrs. A. F. Rose

7005 D. Street, Seat Pleasant, Md.

I would suggest that you give the cat a mineral supplement. There are any number that are available with or without vitamins.

We would appreciate your help in curing our cat of a condition that started several months ago. From a playful, active cat, our neutered male has become a listless pet. He cries and walks constantly before urinating. If he seems to be all right before using his pan, he generally seems distressed afterwards. Every few days he gets through the whole day without discomfort. We hate to have him suffer if we can help him.

—Mrs. J. N. Kimball

31 Burnside St., Lancaster, N. H.

It would appear that the difficulty is a cystitis. There are a number of treatments available, and some antibiotic treatment might be indicated. In some cases special diets may have to be resorted to. This can be a very troublesome problem and would require veterinary supervision.

My two cats, ten and nine years old respectively, refuse all but soft food. I have tried to give them the dry crunchy type of diet, thinking it would be good for their teeth and gums but they will not eat it. Could it be they are too old and their mouths are too tender?

—Mrs. H. E. Finley

9110½ Manhattan Place, Los Angeles 47, Calif.

This would seem to be a matter of the cats' just not liking the hard type of food. As a rule most cats will not eat this type of food too readily.

MERCI

Dear Editors:

My congratulations and compliments for your magazine.

I have always loved cats. I have been around the world, in charge in many countries and always made friendship with the local cats: India, Pakistan, Mexico, Chile and now Peru.

This is my present little Peruvian friend, Rita, a common but nice and grateful stray, and her elder son, Pompei.

MIXED EMOTIONS

Dear Editors:

We would enjoy hearing other opinions on allowing pets freedom to enjoy the wonders of nature.

One lovely afternoon, my husband and I went riding through the countryside, enjoying the beauty of freshly ploughed fields and the other delights the country offers. Suddenly the day was spoiled for us by the sight of a cat that had been killed on the highway.

We felt angry and outraged. Not with the motorists, for it isn't always possible to stop in time; not with the cat for roaming; nor with the owners of the cat for allowing it to face such dangers. We believe it is the nature of the cat to wander alone. We believe this, but we don't permit it.

For ten years we have hardened our hearts to the pleas of our pets to open the doors so they may enjoy the green grass and smells a cat finds outdoors. We respect and understand her need for this, but we have never allowed it.

Our friends condemn us and at times our own consciences have offered conflict with our decision. Should we make this proud, free animal a house-bound captive? Is this kind of survival enough? Is our love for her and her need for us compensation enough for the loss of freedom?

We are not deluding ourselves. We face the fact that it is our need that protects her from possible death on the roads. We have made the choice. We will continue to do so for we cannot face the possibility of losing our pet to that danger which we can control.

We would appreciate knowing how others feel.

REAL GONE

Dear Editors:

Cool, cats, cool. Dig that crazy, mixed up money order for six skins.

My mistress, who is more sapiens than Homo did not check to see if the price was air-borne like everything else. Even mice, as there are fewer barns for the dirty little rodents. Enclosed is another skin to make the beat neat.

SHOCKING STORY

Dear Editors:

As you can see by the photo, our Seal Point has no tail and thereby hangs a tale.

Last year he was chased up a high-power-line and made the mistake of sitting down. Although he suffered from bad burns and the veterinarian had to amputate his tail, he is now as frisky as a kitten. The electric company said he had at least 7200 volts shot through his body. Felt it almost a miracle that he lived. They may grow them big in Texas and Alaska, but in Oregon they're tough as well as big. We're having trouble finding a sofa that will accommodate this fellow.

SOMETHING FISHY

Dear Editors:

While visiting in Switzerland this summer, I purchased a can of whale meat for our four cats as a treat when I returned. Two of them were delighted with it and the other two refused to even taste it. We were surprised, when the label washed off, to find that it had been processed and packed in Allentown, Pennsylvania.

We wrote to the packer but were told there was no outlet in the East for this delicacy.

Wonder if anyone else has tried it on their cats and if they know where it can be purchased.

WASH WATCHING

Dear Editors:

I read an interesting item in a newspaper. A little girl was watching her cat performing her toilet. The child called, "Mama, come and see kitty. She holds her front paw still when she washes her face." The little girl is right. A cat, when washing her face, invariably does get her paw wet, then holds it still while rubbing her face against it.

Watch your husbands too, ladies, when they're shaving. I noticed myself the other day. First I rubbed the foam in with my finger tips. But I was aware that when lathering my upper lip, I held my fingers still and worked my face back and forth.

I have just resigned from C.A. It was a drastic step to take. I have broken the solemn C.A. oath and have returned to practices which I had forsworn forever, but I am not sorry. I will earn once again the displeasure of those for whom I first joined C.A., but their pleas will not haunt me. I have resigned from C.A. I should be miserable and apologetic, but instead, I am once more a free and a happy woman.

And, as a warning to other cat lovers who may be tempted by the insidious propaganda of C.A. or by the prayers of their friends and family to join C.A., here is my story.

The Allen family was always a happy one. One of my earliest memories is of quiet nights at home when Father or Mother would sit reading to us children—Father with Ginger, our big yellow Tom who liked gum drops, sitting on his lap; Mother holding Gladys who was what we called a Calico cat then; and my brothers and I playing on the floor with whichever batch of their youngsters happened to be ruling the house at the time.

Those were happy days, and if the furniture was scratched, the rugs stained, or if occasionally one of us fell downstairs from stumbling over a cat we hadn't seen, no one thought of trying to "improve" the situation. The cats, four or five or six or seven, or however many there were at the time belonged there. We humans loved them, and we adapted ourselves to them as we did to each other. A world without cats was unthinkable for any of us.

But even as kittens grow into cats, so do children grow into men and women, and so eventually Roberta Allen went out into the world. Went out by herself, leaving her cats back at the old home and carrying only the memory of them through school and through her first struggling years in business.

Then came a period during a series of happenings, normal for most young people, when even the realization of the importance of cats faded completely from her mind. It returned about 9:30 one winter evening when I, Roberta Goldworthy then, was sitting before an electric fireplace in a living room of a brand new apartment holding hands with a young man who had somehow become my husband.

"Reg", I said eagerly, "I know just what we need now—a cat!"

"A CAT!" my husband jumped, "A CAT!" I learned too late that Mr. Goldworthy did not share my enthusiasm for the only other thing I needed to make my home complete. But I was young and in love.

"Never mind," I sighed, "Let's forget all about it."

And I tried to forget, honestly and sincerely. Whenever I'd pass a stray cat on the street or see a lonely unhappy kitten in a pet show window, I'd harden my heart and go on but I'd find it difficult to live with myself for the next few days. "Reg is a wonderful man," I'd hear myself muttering, "but is it fair to the cats to shut them out of my life like this?"

The answer came on a rainy October night only eight months after we'd been married. I just couldn't resist picking up the bedraggled, half-starved, Tabby kitten that I found shivering in an alley near our apartment house. And having once picked it up, there was nothing to do, of course, but to take it with me. Even Reg would understand that one couldn't leave a helpless kitten out on such a night. Or would he?

By the time I reached the Goldworthy door I'd decided that he wouldn't. Back we went, the kitten and I, down the elevator to the apartment of the superintendents, Mr. and Mrs. Jungstats. They had a cat of their own, and I knew they would understand.

"Why surely, we'll be glad to keep her for a couple of days until you find a home for her," kindly, middle-aged Mrs. Jungstats said, "and not a word to Mr. Goldworthy, I promise."

But finding a permanent place for a stray kitten, even as nice a one as Gorgeous, we decided to call her that, was far from easy. I couldn't mention her to our nearest friends for fear Reg would hear about it. Others just didn't seem to be interested.

Meanwhile, troubles were growing at home. Both Reg and I worked, and every night I'd stop at the Jungstats to bring Gorgeous a little present of some kind and to play with her, and to explain to the geous on my lap and comforted her. The Doctor looked her over carefully. "Not serious", he said to our great relief, "but I will need a special prescription. Would you want to go for it now?"

It was eight-thirty, snowing, I'd had no dinner, and the druggist was a half mile away, but I thought of none of these as I put on my coat and headed into the storm.

When I came back an hour later there was another storm awaiting me. There in the Jungstat's apartment was Reg, his father and mother, and four or five of our friends. Only then did I remember—it was our first wedding anniversary. But the fire I now expected had been smothered, instead, in a voice of sweet reasonableness Reg said, "Roberta, dear, it's all right. We all understand, and the Doctor (Oh, how I loathe that man) has a wonderful suggestion."

"Yes," the Doctor said, "we've been discussing you, Mrs. Goldworthy, and although the liking for cats is a perfectly harmless trait in most women, who can either take them or leave them alone, with you it seems to be an obsession, if I may frankly say so."

"Just a moment," I interrupted, "How's Gorgeous?"

"Oh, she'll be all right. And now, that just goes to point up my previous statement. Here when you've so seriously upset your husband and his family and friends, your first concern is still the cat. Listen

MY LIFE WITH C. A.

A Warning, in Fiction, to Cat Lovers

By Roberta Allen Goldworthy

Jungstats that I was sure it wouldn't be long before I'd find someone who'd want her. And every night I'd step into my apartment to be greeted with "Roberta, you're late, again!"

I knew that things couldn't go on like this and that sooner or later word would get to Reg of my stopping at the superintendents' each night, but I wasn't prepared for the way it actually happened.

By February Gorgeous had grown into a beautiful friendly cat who ran to greet me each time I rapped on the door, and all of us had grown happily reconciled to the probability that our temporary arrangement had begun to show indications of lasting forever. Then one evening toward the middle of the month when Mrs. Jungstats opened the door there was no Gorgeous at her feet.

"She's sick," Mrs. Jungstats whispered, "awfully sick. I've phoned the Doctor and he should be here any minute."

The hour and a half until he did arrive seemed like eternity, but I held Gorto me Mrs. Goldworthy, it's for your own good."

"Maybe he does have something," I thought. "After all, Reg may have reason to complain."

"I'm sorry," I apologized, "Go on, I'm listening."

"Well, as I was saying," the Doctor continued, "That's the first step—to be willing to examine yourself and to see what your selfish addiction to this cat is doing to your life and your home. Can't you realize that instead of facing your problems as an adult, you are using this cat of yours as a means of hiding from them. I know from talking to your husband and your friends here tonight that your marriage, your job, your whole life will be ruined if you can't give up this cat."

"You think you've been getting away with something, but how do you suppose that these people knew where to find you when you were three hours late for your own wedding anniversary tonight. Look at those scratches on your hands and those grains of litter sticking to your coat. They brand you as a cat-addict wherever you go. Look at those cat hairs on your dress, didn't you know that down at your office they call you 'Scat-Shirt' behind your back?"

"No, Doctor," I said in sincere terror (you must watch out for the C.A. fear technic), "no, you can't mean all of this."

"Yes, Mrs. Goldworthy," he spoke sternly, "it's all true, but it's not as bad as you think. There's still hope for you. Others have been saved, and we're going to save you, too, if you'll let us. There's a group of dedicated persons who have gone through the same trial that you'll go through. They'll help you."

That's how I learned about C.A., Cats Anonymous, the secret group of reformed intemperate cat lovers who by banding together help one another to resist the blandishments of the Cat. There is probably a chapter in your own community, but they work underground, and you'll not know it until the day they feel called upon to save you.

Gorgeous, of course, had to go. The Doctor thoughtfully found a home for her at the other end of town, and, so that I'd be spared any unnecessary temptation he was careful not to let me know her new address.

Then to take up the time formerly spent with Gorgeous, I was visited by other members of C.A.—some of the leading men and women in the community whom no one would ever have suspected of liking cats. It was not exactly fun, and I did not see how playing Canasta could be considered a better employment than associating with a cat, but I did think that Reg and my job should come first, so I really tried to go along with the spirit of C.A.

I even joined in the recruiting of new members and was in fact being considered for the presidency only yesterday, but yesterday was long ago.

Yesterday was the day Reg left on a business trip for a week; yesterday was the day C.A. was scheduled to meet at the Goldworthy apartment; yesterday was the day I met Gorgeous in front of the apartment house when I came home from work!

Gorgeous, my once beautiful Gorgeous, sat there on the apartment steps mangy, thin, and sick, looking up at me with pitiful eyes.

Gorgeous! Fate was with us both to send her back to me that night. I took her upstairs with me, petted her, cleaned her, fed her and fixed up a bed for her

—Mary Ann Lucas

where I knew she'd be comfortable.

Just then, the doorbell rang, and I answered it. The first member of C.A. What should I do, I thought. Confess and explain everything or shut Gorgeous up and hope they wouldn't see her? But I didn't have to make the decision.

"A CAT!"—There's a cat in this house," was the first thing my visitor said. He was Mr. Van Verver, the founder of C.A., and he had always been proud to say, he had never had to reform—he'd never liked cats, ever!

"Yes," I told him, "there's a cat here, and," I added firmly, "I'm going to keep her."

By the time I'd explained what had happened the other members had arrived and I decided on a bold stroke, I brought Gorgeous out for them to see.

"Don't, Don't—take that cat away," shouted Mr. Van Verver, but the other members clustered around.

"Oh, she'll be beautiful when she's well," one of them said.

"Can't I pet her just once?" asked a husky truck driver who'd been forced to join by his wife.

"She's got gorgeous eyes," said one of the woman members whose landlord wouldn't let her keep cats, "I wish I had one like her."

Mr. Van Verver sensed that something unpleasant was happening. "Come on," he shouted, "Everyone. We must leave her at once. And not another word about cats."

But he was too late. "I'm staying," said the truck driver.

"I'm going to get a cat again," said one of the women.

"And I am, too," cried another, and another, and another!

When Mr. Van Verver went, he went alone.

So C.A., Cats Anonymous, no longer exists in our town. Instead, CATTS, the Club for the Advancement of Toms and Tabbies, held its initial meeting last night, and looks forward to a glorious existence. But you other cat lovers be on your guard, for somewhere, perhaps right in your city Van Verver may still be promoting his evil purposes.

As for what will happen when Reg comes back? Well, I am a little worried that he might not like sleeping on the livingroom divan, but I think he'll get used to it. Gorgeous, you see, won't sleep anywhere but right in the middle of what used to be his bed.

1961 DIRECTORY ANNUAL

RIGHT in the middle of this issue—starting on page 12—is the Ninth Annual CATS Magazine Directory of American and Canadian cat breeders. This year more than 400 listings direct you to Kittens, Cats, and Stud Service of every breed and color of cat throughout almost all of North America. Boarding places are also listed and, as always, this CATS carries commercial advertising for the finest of all kinds of products for your cat.

Other features also make this January CATS one you will want to keep and refer to all year: The Annual "Through-the-Book" photo series starts on page nine and shows a cat and bird friendship by Tommy Lark. Juanita Warner has again prepared a complete Index of all of 1960's CATS (page 25). Two "cat classics", an Editorial from November 1951 and a light fiction feature from January 1952, are repeated by request. (Following the Directory are the Picture of the Month and other material usually found nearer the front of the magazine.)

FEWLINES 'BOUT FELINES

SONG ON THREE KITTENS

The white for me and for you the gold —
Over the mountains the world was old
As a wizened cat with war-chewed ears
And a shifty heart full of feline fears.
But midnight sang from an ancient room
Of a hero cat on a Pharaoh's tomb,
And pastures of clover, pigeons in chatter,
Middle-sized mice and milk from a platter.
Two flakes of snow in the forest night
And a miniature tiger burning bright;
The gold one for me, the white one for you —
Heigh-ho and good morning, the old world is new.

—Eleanor Catron

TIME CAT

The cat is silent as the soul,
And subtle as the mind,
The cat is savage as the flesh,
But men and mice are blind.
The cat holds time within her claws,
A mouse beneath her power,
For time is younger than the cat,
Who eats it hour by hour.
The cat purrs on hirvanically
And as she dreams we fall,
How wise are they who worshipped cats
Who do not care at all.

—Lilith Lorraine

WARNING

Beware the outstretched hand . . .
the soft caress behind the ears.
Hiss with suspicion at
The false compassionate human stares.
Restrain your savage appetite . . .
refuse the scrap of food
Donated by the deity who crouches at your side.
It is a momentary whim, not love
that moves the god;
Suburban hearthstone will not welcome you. Be not deceived.

CATTY FENCING

*The wisest counsel I begat,
Came from my old tabby cat.
Somehow that green-eyed feline knave,
Can stare me silent when I rave!*

*I've yet to get the best of him,
He's never yet lost the last grin.
But what does even irk me more —
I do suspect he's keeping score!*

RELUCTANCE

Christmas is over, and there you sit
Under the tree, as expectant every bit
As when it was put up. Don't you comprehend
That all good things in time must end?

(Your stocking is empty, chewed up
the catnip mouse,
And lost is the rubber spool somewhere in the house. . .)

Now the shining tinsel, the bright balls that dress

It, must come down—somewhat less,
I must say, than what went on.
You would know something of where they've gone!

But what young feline, left all alone,
Could resist temptation, unless made of stone?

Not, you understand, that I readily condone

Mischief in any guise, were you not prone

To pay for your mistakes with abundant affection;

And if I were less clever at swift detection,

I could very well assume some woodland pixie

Had played me tricks, for the cutting of his tree.

So there you sit . . . while it's denuded.
And somehow I wonder if you ever were deluded. . .

about . . . St. Nick!

—Catherine Walker

STRAY

*Some folks might say you were a stray to see you sitting there,
but in your eyes some grave surmise
made me have a care.*

*Instead of scraps of charity
I offered you my best . . .
your royal manner prompted me to say, "Please be my guest."*

—Fayette Mills Couzens

THE PROPER KITTEN

My kitty can't escape from me
I track her through the snow
For everywhere that she has stepped
Her little puff tracks show.

They aren't a bit like my tracks
Which are big and wide and deep
Nor not a bit like little dog's
Which look just like a leap!

They're small and flower like — just so.

They are the very kind,
As she steps dainty through the snow
That you'd expect to find;

She's such a proper kitten.

—Rose-Marie Provencher

The lick of a tiger
Is something one never forgets."*

*With actresses, singers
Tycoons or leftwingers
The wickedest cats are the rage;
Like a polkadot leopard
Suburbia's peppered —
With kitties best left in a cage.*

*Though ocelot, cheetah
Or lynx can't be beat — ah,
Such rare foreign felines I flee,
For the far less majestic
Old tomcat (domestic)
Is wild enough wild cat for me!*

KIDDO'S NINE LIVES

by Edward Bergstrom

Just fifty years ago, on the fog-ridden Saturday morning of October 15, 1910 at Atlantic City, Mrs. Melvin Vaniman, wife of the Chief Engineer, placed aboard the airship America a young gray cat. Spectators applauded. Kiddo had been well liked around the hangar all during the nine weeks in which the America was assembled. He would make a nice mascot.

A line was given to the yacht Olive, which began to tow the block-long, five-story high airship over the inlet into the bay toward the sea. Kiddo went berserk. He flew all over, yowling piteously. J. R. Irwin, the radio operator, stationed with his equipment in the lifeboat, which hung six feet below the gondola, shouted up to F. Murray Simon, Navigator. "This cat is raising the devil. I think he ought to be left."

"Be bad luck," Simon shouted. But Vaniman differed. Kiddo would disturb his naps, on man's first attempt to fly the Atlantic. The two men argued vehemently.

The great issue was put to Walter Wellman, the fifty-three-year-old newspaperman with a flair for leading aviation experiments. The veteran political correspondent for the Chicago Record-Herald had conducted airship flights that dunked him into waters of the Arctic. Now he asked to taste the Atlantic.

Wellman told Vaniman to do as he liked about Kiddo. "Without any fear of midnight howls on the one hand, and without any superstitions on the other, it all seemed rather trivial."

Vaniman got hold of the wild cat and tied him into a canvas bag. Feeling the rope vibrate with Kiddo's rage and struggling, he began to lower the bag toward the Olive. The bag almost in reach of the launch, its captain pleaded rough water and cast off the tow line. Kiddo dangled between sky and sea. Vaniman's cheeks burned with guilty temptation, but the humane alternative was to haul Kiddo back up aboard the America.

One of the two motors was started. The twin twelve-foot wooden props of the eight-cylinder E.N.V. stirred the still fog—and Walter Wellman had fooled the scoffers, who had said he wouldn't get off the ground. Everybody was happy. All except Kiddo. His face was dour. He paced and yowled in this strange mobile attic. "Cats," observed Wellman, "have no . . . ken of . . . the history of progress; no vanity in pioneering."

Simon found what Kiddo would eat, when Irwin accidentally dropped a piece of biscuit, while breakfasting early Sunday morning. The America by this time had already just averted fire, explosion, collision and shipwreck—and was just drifting, its now one only half-good motor idle, in a good southwest wind. This suddenly changed to west-northwest, at thirty miles an hour. Gusts threatened the lifeboat.

Kiddo went back up the rope ladder. "But it was not a happy cat," Wellman wrote.

Kiddo paced, yowling. Simon tossed him onto a hammock, a blanket over him. He got quiet. He later ate, and even helped morale. "Whenever we of the crew could find time to snatch a few minutes' sleep," said Wellman, "puss had a way of nestling close to the face of one of us under the blanket, there sleeping soundly."

The wind shifted again and blew strongly from the North East, and this was the turning point of the voyage. At a hundred forty miles east of Nantucket, the America began to drift south and southwest out of the transatlantic ship lanes. Sunday night, Wellman napped and dreamed always of the Queen of Spades in his hand, or "being put on him." It thus surprised him to wake "often with Kiddo's warm fur on our cheeks" and find the America still aloft.

Dead reckoning at noon Monday, the sun out, fixed the airship's position at four hundred miles east of Hampton Roads. Monday afternoon the men drifted and talked about saving their lives. The wind drove them toward Bermuda, the nearest land. Irwin told Wellman a steamer left Bermuda on Monday.

Few steamers traveled this part of the ocean; there were just two with regular weekly service between Bermuda and New York. But watching all night, and watching the barometer since a hurricane was moving up toward Florida, he spotted the ship at four-thirty Tuesday morning. It was signaled and contacted by Morse slide lantern and then radio in prelude to the attempt by the Wellman party to escape from the fast-drifting airship, and that of the ship to rescue them. Finally, the crew on the America were ready to launch their lifeboat. Vaniman carefully opened the hydrogen release valve cord—after Aubert had heroically fixed a faulty air feed pipe to one of the six reserve tanks, filled for ballast. Having righted itself again, the airship slowly lowered. The men took their places, ready for the plunge.

Vaniman shouted to wait. He wanted time to make an opening for air in the watertight after compartment which had been screwed down with Kiddo inside. The other men all laughed. There was enough air for the cat for a month.

Two release hooks snapped. The lifeboat plumped into a rough sea. The equilibrators, or dragging tail of thirty gasoline ballast cylinders, brushed two of the men and stove the forward compartment. The prow of the S.S. Trent loomed before the lifeboat's oars could be unshipped. The steamer's sharp stem struck the lifeboat a glancing blow on its side. The lifeboat sheered off and ran along the iron sides of the steamer's port quarter. The Trent threw over a line, fast to its deck. The others couldn't hold the searing rope while Wellman couldn't let loose, a hitch wound around his right hand. But for no apparent reason, the line suddenly let go.

The churning propellers then approached. But, oddly, the whirlpool caused by them spun the lifeboat past.

When the men got their voices, it was Simon who said, "That must have been our ninth escape from Davy Jones' locker. I told you it was a good thing to have a cat along. Cats have nine lives."

Including Vaniman, the others solemnly nodded.

The Trent returned. The men climbed a rope ladder amid cheers by officers, crew and passengers—in the first rescue by a surface ship of the crew and passenger of an airship. Kiddo was treated to a deck breakfast. Then Captain Down radioed Sandison & Son, the steamer's New York agent. "At 5 A.M. today sighted Wellman's airship America in distress. After three hours' maneuvering and fresh winds blowing got Wellman with entire crew and cat. They were hauled safely aboard. All are well."

The America had smashed Count Zepelin's record for airships, made over land, both for time and distance. The America had motored and drifted 1008 miles and 72 hours—three full days. When news of the feat and rescue reached public print the role of Kiddo was burlesqued in one Chicago newspaper. But the fanciful account of a great meeting called by the head cats of that city to honor Cat Wellman, closed on a more sensible note that gave Kiddo the credit that was his due, in a quote from Mrs. Clinton Locke, a former President of the Beresford Cat Club.

Said Mrs. Locke, "There is something quiet and fear-allaying about a cat and for that reason Mr. Wellman probably wanted it around. I'm glad he saved the cat, and the fact he did shows his regard for that little animal. It is an old tradition that the presence of a cat on a ship—a sea ship I mean—is a good omen. Why shouldn't the same hold true on an air ship?"

"Don't mope, pal. Jump up here and watch TV."

"Tips to the Novice" by Blanche W. Smith

How many times have you sat down and watched your little mothers cuddle and nurse and wash their tiny babies? To me this is so refreshing and relaxing, and I know it must be to you, too. Yet, have you ever seen a mother cat not take care of her litter? Even if she's in great discomfort and pain, she'll make every effort to care for them.

Fortunately, most of our mothers and their kittens keep strong and healthy with just normal care and love. But every once in a while trouble does strike. When it does, the first rule is: go to your veterinarian. Choose one of the doctors in your area who likes to work with cats, and always depend upon him when you and your cat need help.

When I discuss these medical problems in my articles, it's to help you recognize when your cat is in trouble and to help you understand what the doctor is doing and what you can do to help him and the patient.

Cystitis, or infection of the urinary tract is relatively common in cats. It's been discussed in CATS Magazine by Muriel Morton Koenig (May 1955), by Robert L. Stansbury, D.V.M. and Roger W. Truesdail, Ph.D. (January 1957), and in my articles in March and July 1956 and June and July 1957. But I'm reaching so many of you new readers that for your benefit and for those of you who may have missed it before, I think it's time to bring you up-to-date on this subject again.

This month I will talk about the female cat in particular, and in a later article will discuss the specific problem of urinary blockage in the male.

So, now let me tell you what cystitis is and what you can do if it ever strikes your female.

Cystitis is an inflammation of the urinary bladder due to infection or erosion which can be caused by a change in the acidity of the urine. It can be either acute or chronic. Various conditions can bring it about: punctures from fractured bones; pressure from forming fetuses; exposure to cold; calculi; foreign matter in the drinking water; infection from the kidneys, the urethra or the ureters. The most common cause is the formation of calculi—either in the form of tiny crystals or as larger stones which may partially or completely block the tract.

Now, what should you look for? Well, cystitis is most likely to strike if your little queen comes into season a lot and is not mated, but it may also come after her litter of kittens is born, just after the litter is weaned, or just after the queen is mated.

CYSTITIS IN

So you must watch her at these times in particular.

The first definite sign is frequent urinating. Your girl will go to the pan, dribble a few drops, clean herself, and then in a little while go back and try again—over and over. At this point, if you give her an empty pan without litter or papers in it, you can hold it up to the light and often see the tiny crystals in the urine. But don't wait for that. Now is the time to go to the doctor. If you neglect her for a day or two there will be blood or pink pus in the urine and the condition will be much harder to treat.

You can begin to suspect trouble, though, even before you get definite proof. There may be some rather unpleasant change in the habits of your girl. But do not be harsh with her—it won't be her fault. She may become very slovenly, caring little about using her pan, attempting her toilet any place. She will care little about her appearance, and her fur will become very dry and coarse. She will be miserable and hard to get along with. She'll act as if she were extremely lazy, and won't care too much about eating, so her weight will drop.

As soon as you realize that she's sick, it's time for you and your doctor to take her in hand and help her regain her health. The two treatments I will mention can usually be depended upon to clean up the condition, but remember, they can only be given by a veterinarian after he has examined your cat and confirmed that it is cystitis which is causing the trouble and whether medication will cure it—or if the stones are so large that an operation will be necessary.

Both of these medical treatments have been thoroughly covered in veterinary medical literature, so your doctor will probably be familiar with them.

The use of Furadantin (Eaton Laboratories) has proved effective, and is relatively easy. One-half of a 50 mg. tablet is given three times a day until a total of fifteen tablets is administered. Furadantin is not an antibiotic, but is an antibacterial agent that has an affinity for the urinary tract where it gives almost immediate results. It also relaxes the ureteral and urethral walls to help permit passage of small blockages if present.

A slightly more complicated, but equally effective course of treatment uses: one cc Combiotic (Pfizer Laboratories) (repeated in three days if evidence remains); one-half tablet of Sulfidium (Columbus Pharmacal Co.) twice a day for three days only; one tablet of Urised (Chicago Pharmacal Co.) three times a day.

Combiotic is a combination of penicillin and streptomycin which is effective in killing off the cocci and bacillus coli groups which are present in cases of cystitis. It is given intramuscularly, and if blood is still present in the urine after three days, the dosage is repeated. Urised contains in-redients which help to enlarge the ureters and urethra, and the Sulfidium is specific in handling the attack of urinary infection.

After the administration of these treatments, you will notice a change in the color of the urine. This is an indication that the medication is getting through and working. If you've caught it in time, your kitty will begin to urinate in a normal way, and her whole attitude will rapidly improve. Soon she will be herself again.

Even though it appears to be completely cleared up, once in a while cystitis will recur. If it does, you'll know all the signs, and you can get your girl to the doctor again at the first moment and save her much suffering.

It is wonderful to realize what veterinary medical science is accomplishing in improving the health of our cats and in easing our minds. Only a few short years ago urinary troubles of this kind had to be treated in hit-or-miss fashion with undue suffering by the cat and our own mental anguish due to the knowledge that recovery could not always be expected even when the condition was caught early. Now your veterinarian has the medicines and the knowledge to give you the assurance that bladder stoppage if caught in time can be rapidly cleared up.

Because of the smaller size of the male passages, this condition is more serious in males than in females and surgical treatment has to be resorted to more often. I intend to cover this fully in another article soon. However, the same symptoms apply, except that speed in treatment is even more important in the male than in the female. Get your boy to the hospital without a moment's delay once you even suspect a bladder stoppage.

As I mentioned early in this article, we can expect our cats to be in good health and to thrive on the normal care we give them. But once in a great while sickness will strike, and then knowing what to look for and what to do can save us much worry and many heartaches.

ROBSWAY'S CROWN

IS FULL OF GEMS!

WE ARE PROUD (but humble) AS WE PRESENT A FEW OF THEM . . .

INT. AND TR. CH. WILLOWOOD
TREASURE OF ROBSWAY, outstanding
Solid Red Male. In his few shows so far this year TREASURE has made his CFA Championship, ACA International Championship (U.S. & Canada) and ACFA Triple Championship.

DB. CH. CASTILLA BIT O'HONEY
OF ROBSWAY. Lovely Cream son of the late Gr. & Tr. Ch. Longhill's Michael II of Castilla. HONEY was the recipient of the 1960 All-Eastern Cream male award and is again winning many "Bests". He has recently been purchased by Mr. Donald Woodlief of New York.

CH. NOR-MONT BLUE PLEASURE, worthy pale Blue son of Gr. Ch. Nor-Mont Applause. This is a big boy and is still maturing; he's winning his share of Bests and will do even better things next year.

A few top show-type kittens available
. . . breeder and pet types, too. Prices are reasonable; correspondence welcomed. Stud service.

BACK FENCE (from page 34)

named Lady Dottie.

Among the more important lessons: the value of a life of dignity without self pity; compromise without surrender and complete self respect.

A cat can prove the joy of small delights. Needing no contrived amusement, she can completely lose herself in pleasure with a piece of crumbled paper, a shopping bag, even find her castle in Spain fashioned from a box from the market.

She can, and has, made the adjustment man insists upon. By nature a creature of the wild, she has accepted the limits placed by humans with grace and, in most cases, enjoyment. More important even than accepting what fate has given, the virtue of being happy with today is hers.

Never regretting nor brooding over the past and oblivious to the trials of tomorrow, she lives in the present. Vitally aware of all around when awake, she sleeps as though she had all of eternity at her command.

Mr. Hal Boyle does you well when he suggests you allow your cat to lead you into a wonderful way of life.

This is a prescription recommended by some psychologists. Child psychologists particularly subscribe to the theory that a small animal in the home is important.

A clipping from the Baltimore Sun informs us that one of that city's private schools for boys keeps two cats, a mother cat and her daughter.

The director of the school feels that the mother's highly developed maternal instincts teach a child that he can't have everything he grabs for—simply by staying out of his reach. The younger cat who will tolerate gentle handling, instructs the child by inflicting physical pain when unkindness of the child suggests it.

Reminds us of a rather clever letter that appeared a while back in the Chicago Tribune. Allegedly composed by a cat in answer to all the publicity given to using animals in research, it went something like this:

"I'm a cat and I have something to say about this fuss. I'm certain they shouldn't pick high type intelligent, useful cats like me.

"I have just given birth to two of the most beautiful, high type intelligent kittens you ever saw. I feel I can even do better the next time.

"There is an ugly brown, bob-tailed cat that hangs around here I think they could have. And old Black Nose, that ruffian who chases me up trees, would make a fine experiment piece. In fact, I think most tomcats could be used, except, of course, Blackie, my boy friend.

"Come to think of it, there's a little red-headed boy here who is always grabbing me just when I'm settling down for my nap. He mashes me and rubs my fur with his clammy little hands just when I have it all clean and neat. He just doesn't know how to handle a cat. I think they could have him, too."

Carroll Cloar, who did the secretarial details for Felice, the cat, is to be complimented.

So too, are all of you, who managed 1960 so very well. Now, an even better model is available. So, a very Happy New Year. J. L.

ACFA OFFERS MORE!

STARTING with the first 1961 issue of the Official ACFA Bulletin, the Stud Book registrations of the Association will be published in the Bulletin in such manner as to give its members complete ACFA Stud Book records with no expense other than that of a suitable binder. These records will start with the inception of ACFA and will be so printed that they can be detached from the Bulletin without in any way defacing the Bulletin or the Records.

This advance announcement is made so as to allow ample time for all Fanciers who wish to avail themselves of this ACFA feature to join the Association and thus receive the Bulletin and the Stud Book records which will be sent to all members.

SHELTER NOTES

Dear Editors:

Many friends of the Maude Erwin Foundation for Cats have written asking that there be something in CATS Magazine regarding the present situation at the shelter and its future plans.

Following Mrs. Erwin's death the Foundation has continued in operation at the old location on Bonita Mesa Road, but we are now being forced to move and to build a new shelter—to cost over $25,000—because of the sale of the present property. We are staying now only on a month-to-month basis and at a very high rental.

The front elevation of our new shelter is shown in the drawing. We are appealing to all friends, old and new, to help us in every way possible in raising the necessary funds to build it. It is so desperately needed at this time to provide shelter and care for the stray, friendless, and abandoned cats and kittens until good homes can be found.

Organizations such as ours devoted exclusively to cats deserve the full support of all cat people. The local Humane Societies and Pounds can not possibly care for the large number of cats and kittens brought to them. As a result, a great many of these animals that otherwise might have found homes and the love and kindness they need so much have had to be destroyed.

As are most such shelters, we are completely dependent upon the sincere interest and good will of all animal lovers who are deeply aware of the great need. I will fully answer all inquiries.

Happy New Year...

And this little tiger seems to be shouting it.

The judges were particularly interested in the composition of this photograph. Designed lighting seems to cause the tail to be attached to nothingness and the positive face and body fade into the same dimension. Clever effects by Eleanor Rost, Lake Vahalla, Montville, New Jersey, paid off.

Of course, this smart little kitten did a share too. Representing the coming year with a positive beginning, an indistinct middle but a fine end, he stands, a worthy symbol.

This is just the first of 1961. We'll need eleven more good pictures this year. Why don't you help us?

CAT HATE

thrown from towers in the Middle Ages and burned in cages in great bonfires? Why do our newspapers even today carry stories about the torturing of cats by otherwise apparently normal human beings?

There are dog lovers, and those who can take dogs or leave them alone — even those who are a little bit afraid of big, ugly dogs; but as for a cult of dog haters, one just doesn't exist. The canary, and rabbit, horse and goldfish are accepted on a take it or leave it basis; no one who owns them need fear that he'll find one of his friends bearing a morbid fear or fanatic hatred of his harmless pet. But the soft, clean, intelligent little animal that we call a cat has earned the love of part of the human race and yet, bears the hatred of part of it. Why? Why do some people hate cats? What can we as cat lovers do to change them?

It would be too great a simplification to say that all of the enemies of the cat are cut from the same pattern. Yet it is not difficult to believe that all carry deep in their subconscious minds a degree of racial jealousy — of this sublimely self-sufficient creature whom Clarence Day in his pleasantly satirical This Simian World demonstrates is so superior to mankind in many ways. Without realizing it, all of us, perhaps, sometimes wish in our hearts that we could treat the pressing unimportant details of the world around us with the gracious indifference which the cat shows to those about her. The dog, the horse, the goldfish — few of us would envy them their dispositions or emotional make-ups. But the cat — who can help but envy her.

But that, the jealousy thesis, is more or less the traditional attitude of cat lovers toward the outsider. "He doesn't love cats because he's not sensitive enough to understand them," is another and there's much truth in both. It does require a sensitive nature to know a cat, if a human can ever be said to know one, and it's all too easy for a frustrated human lost in the maze of contradictory rules governing his work, his play, his religion, his love, to strike out at a symbol which seems first to express complete, studied indifference to any and all rules — and second to show a maddening disregard of the "desire to please" — that major motivation of most of the shallow lives of today.

Those are two reasons why many people hate cats, there is no question about it. Equally important is the case of the cat hater who hates not only cats, but cat lovers as well. Typically incapable of experiencing anything but self-love he wishes to deprive the cat lover of a pleasure which he, himself, can not understand or enjoy. Were these the only reasons, however, we could expect cat hatred to grow stronger as the frustrations of modern living continue to pile up.

The evidence, though, is just to the contrary. Despite the presence of mislabelled "Friends of the Birds", and other similar groups, the cat is every day becoming more popular and his decriers fewer. Some observers have even thought that they have sensed a possible return of Puss and Tabby to the pedestal of Bubastis. Of that we must beware, for it is actually that pedestal on which may be based the ageless, continuing cult of the cat hater.

The ancient Egyptians despite the four thousand years between us were men much as ourselves. There were male and female, workers and idlers, rich and poor. Morons and intellectuals, temple-goers and non-believers. Thus, when we say that Bubastis was sacred to Pasht, and that the cat was revered as a god, we mean it much in the same way that Benares for example, is a sacred city today to the Hindoo, and the monkey a sacred animal.

Few people can visit India during famine and not question the aspect of a religion which permits monkeys, and cows, and other animals to live while human beings are starving for want of food. So, too, must it have seemed to travelers and even to many dwellers in Bubastis, that the fanatical worship given to cats was unworthy of human beings. What would we think of a law today which made the killing of any animal (even accidentally) punishable by death?

Thus, perhaps, there developed in Bubastis a subversive movement. A group of intellectuals whose purpose was not to destroy cats, but to destroy the worship of them as gods. Yet, the history of "movements" is that the purpose eventually becomes secondary to perpetuating the organization, and that a symbol takes its place.

What in Bubastis could have been the symbol but "Down with the Cat"? And once the movement started, what more natural than that it should deteriorate from hatred of what cats stood for into hatred of cats as cats. Until finally on a day when human and feline blood mingled deep in the gutters of Bubastis, the cat haters took over the city of the cat-goddess.

The history books do not tell this; we know only that the cat faction vanished. And this could well be how it happened. And having happened, the cries of triumph of the cat haters still may linger in the racial memory of many men, to be called forth when they see others worshipping the cat. When they see danger of a new cult of the cat arising from the ashes of the dead cat city of Egypt.

So it may have been that in the Middle Ages it was the revival by cat-lovers of the legend that cats were occult which acted as the catalyst in bringing about the mass burnings and torturings which blot the histories of all countries at that time. Certainly, it is as the protagonists of the cat have praised her earthly qualities, rather than her other-worldly ones that she has enjoyed the greatest tolerance among all men.

To answer our questions then, it may well be that the serious cat hater of today is motivated by one of the final ripples caused by the overthrowing of a pedestal in Egypt thousands of years ago.

However, so long as our love of the cat remains within reasonable bounds, the common sense of mankind as a whole is too sound to permit the cat hater to do more than shadow box a self-created demon. It is only when cat worship itself goes beyond common sense that the enemies of the cat have a chance.

Fortunately we are living at a time when the cat's popularity as a pet and a companion is at an all-time high and when her past associations with both gods and with demons has all but been forgotten.

We must continue to expend our full efforts to secure for our feline friends the even fuller recognition which is their due. If that is properly accomplished, so that the understanding and appreciation of the cat becomes a true part of education and general knowledge, it is not expecting too much to believe that when this generation of cat haters dies away there will be no new one to take its place.

In this new Age of the Cat, the cat has earned a new pedestal — that of the household pet without peer, and from there no one will ever remove her.

The Back Fence

January . . . first days of a fine unused year. And even yet we are cautioned to remember that really there is no new thing under the sun.

Louise Rucks, Oklahoma City Oklahoma's feature writer, gave cognizance that all is old, with perhaps, a different twist. Everyone has likely heard of the frantic hostess who rushed her dinner guests to the hospital for emergency treatment after finding her food-sampling cat dead on the back porch. The O. Henry being the cat hadn't been poisoned by the meal; he had been run over by a neighbor who waited until the company had gone to tell the owner of the accident.

Miss Ruck told the french version. A father had gathered mushrooms for the room meal. There were sufficient for the family cat to share in a tid-bit or two. Lurch was scarcely over when the family noticed the cat was twitching and seemed to be in extreme pain. Amid magnificent french confusion, it was concluded papa had made error and had brought home toadstools instead of mushrooms!

The hurriedly sought apothecary insisted the hospital be advised. Stomachs were pumped and four shaken, wan and unhappy people returned home prepared to face the unpleasant and sad fact of a dead pet.

Au lieu de tragedie . . . they found a purring mama chat and quatre petit chatons. Four little babies, and a proud, happy cat instead of expected unhappiness. Tres joli.

The first reaction of Miss Rucks was one of amusement, followed quickly by one of indignation at the family who did not take the cat with them for medical attention. Ours was one of surprise that a Gallic family wouldn't suspect that their feline bonne amie was enroute and about to produce wonderful proof of amour. Truly, this is not in keeping with the legend of the constantly-conscious-of-romance French.

High on the romantic-ladies roster should be the name of Mitzie. The Robbinsdale, Minnesota, Post carried her picture and her record of fifteen kittens in eleven and one-half months. Four females and one male in each of the three litters. ("All the better to procreate", she said.) Her owner, Bob Bork, has a slight advantage over most prolific female cat owners. He works for the Post and gets free advertising privileges. And with such a gal as is his Mitzie, who could begrudge him this?

Fact is, any newspaper writer who keeps notice of the cat in the public's eye gets our vote for the man of the year. With high count on this score is Hal Boyle whose column is syndicated.

One of his best columns gave wise counsel. In fact, could well be used as a sort of a new year's resolution form. Mr. Boyle admits that every member of his family has learned something from his now well-known black and white cat
